Running on a platform of anti-corruption, Gibson has repeatedly declared himself as a small-town candidate, and not a "creature of Washington" or career politician.

When asked what the most pressing issue facing his constituents was, Gibson answered that Arkansans have watched crime skyrocket, and that if elected, would be an attorney general who's hard on crime.

Another big-ticket item for Gibson in his campaign is voting rights. He has been critical of social media companies stating that misinformation has been harmful to the citizens of Arkansas, and has promised to hold those companies accountable for the spread of misinformation about COVID-19.

Other items on his platform include fighting human trafficking, curtailing recidivism in prison, and reform sentencing and the parole system. Trivia: Gibson owns a cat named Charley, who recently celebrated his 18th birthday.
