

NEVADA

Nevada voters will select a new governor, lieutenant governor, and attorney general this cycle in what are all considered to be competitive contests. All 42 house seats are on the ballot along with 11 of the 21 senate seats: Democrats are expected to maintain control of both chambers.

Attorney General

Republican Nominee

Adriana Fralick

Former Cannabis Compliance Board Chair and Trump-endorsed Adriana Fralick secured the Republican nomination for attorney general after prevailing over Douglas County Commissioner Danny Tarkanian in the June primary. She has run for office once before, finishing third among five candidates in a 2012 bid for the state board of education.

Fralick brings an extensive background in Nevada government, having served as Legal Counsel to the Nevada Commission on Ethics, General Counsel to Governor Jim Gibbons (R), Assistant General Counsel to the Public Utilities Commission, and Executive Secretary to the Nevada Gaming Control Board and Nevada Gaming Commission. She also served on Governor Gibbons' Crime Commission, as Chief Deputy District Attorney for Carson City, and was subsequently appointed Deputy City Manager of the state capital.

Her campaign is focused on ending child exploitation, supporting domestic violence victims, backing law enforcement, improving school safety, and increasing government transparency.

Fralick has also made election integrity a pillar of her campaign, promising to pursue a SAVE Nevada Act modeled after President Trump's SAVE America Act. The legislation would end universal mail-in ballots, eliminate automatic voter registration, and require all ballots to be counted on election day.

On public safety, she has committed to prioritizing the protection of domestic violence victims through stronger enforcement of restraining orders and swift prosecution of offenders.

Fralick has vowed to pursue legal action against the state of California over policies she argues are driving up fuel costs for Nevadans.

Nevada has a long history of competitive statewide races, and this fall's attorney general contest is expected to be no exception. Fralick will face Senate Majority Leader Nicole Cannizzaro (D) in November.

Trivia: Born in Mexico, Guzmán Fralick moved to Nevada when she was 9.
