

NORTH DAKOTA

Voters in North Dakota will elect an Attorney General in 2026. Twenty-four (24) out of 47 State Senate seats are up for reelection, along with 47 out of 94 State House seats. Republicans currently hold strong majorities in both chambers and control every statewide elected office.

Attorney General

Republican Nominee

Attorney General Drew Wrigley

Drew Wrigley was elected Attorney General in November 2022 and currently serves as the state's 30th attorney general. Wrigley has held several prominent federal and state positions. In 2001, President George W. Bush nominated him to serve as North Dakota's 17th U.S. Attorney, a position he held until 2009. He later served as North Dakota's Lt. Governor from 2010 to 2016. In 2019, President Donald Trump nominated Wrigley to serve as North Dakota's 19th U.S. Attorney.

Wrigley maintains that some of his successes as attorney general have been increasing transparency and accountability for the office, and reducing the backlog of tests at the state's crime lab while adding firearms examiners to the forensic staff.

Trivia: Wrigley's family has deep agricultural roots in North Dakota, with the Wrigley Brothers Farm still operating in Walsh County.