Voters in Florida will elect a governor, lieutenant governor, and attorney general. All 120 state house seats and 20 of 40 state senate seats are up for election. Florida remains firmly Republican at the state level, but Democrats are looking to make legislative gains in select districts, particularly following the state's mid-decade redistricting.

Governor

Republican Nominee

Attorney General James Uthmeier

Uthmeier was appointed by Governor Ron DeSantis (R) in February 2025 to fill the vacancy created when Ashley Moody resigned to take her seat in the U.S. Senate. Before becoming Attorney General, Uthmeier served as Chief of Staff to DeSantis. He previously served as counsel to Donald Trump's 2016 presidential campaign and as a senior advisor and counsel to U.S. Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross.

As attorney general, Uthmeier has emphasized public safety, immigration enforcement, parental rights, and protecting children.

His campaign highlights his work prosecuting criminals, combating illegal immigration, and pursuing legal action against corporations over issues he says threaten children and shareholder value.

Trivia: Upon his appointment, Uthmeier became Florida's youngest attorney general.
