Attorney General

Republican Nominee

Jon Echols

Jon Echols represented Oklahoma House District 90 from 2012 to 2024, where served as House Majority Floor Leader and played a substantial role in shaping legislative agendas in committee and on the floor. Echols holds a JD from Oklahoma City University and has practiced civil litigation, regulatory compliance, and consumer protection law. He is the co-founder of Shelter Oklahoma Schools, a charity that raises money to build storm shelters at schools across the state. He has also owned healthcare and construction companies.

Echols argues that his experience practicing before Oklahoma courts would prepare him well for the attorney general's office, as a central responsibility of the role is defending the state in litigation.

Throughout his time in the legislature, Echols positioned himself as a staunch conservative, defending the Constitution, law enforcement, religious liberty, the 2nd Amendment, and the right to life. He created the Legislative Office of Fiscal Transparency tasked with identifying waste, fraud, and abuse of taxpayer's money.

Echols plans to bring these conservative cultural values to the attorney general's office, calling to strengthen border security, eliminate DEI initiatives from state government, uphold Judeo Christian values, and keep men out of women's sports.

Echols supports strengthening tribal relationships, calling for more tribal compacts and less lawsuits. He believes handling tribal relations through litigation removes authority from the state government and rather places it on the federal government.

Trivia: Jon Echols is a fifth-generation Oklahoman, and his family still owns the farm they have had in Okeene since 1893.
