

NEVADA

Nevada voters will select a new governor, Lt. governor, and attorney general this cycle in what are all considered to be competitive contests. All 42 house seats are on the ballot along with 11 of the 21 senate seats. Democrats are expected to maintain control of both chambers.

Attorney General

Democratic Nominee

Nicole Cannizzaro

Senate Majority Leader Nicole Cannizzaro secured the Democratic nomination for attorney general following a competitive primary against State Treasurer Zach Conine. The race generated the highest ad spending of any Democratic primary in the state this cycle. Cannizzaro ultimately advanced to the general election with approximately 60% of the vote.

Cannizzaro has represented District 6 in the Nevada Senate since 2016 and made history in 2019 as the first woman elected Senate Majority Leader. During her tenure, she served as Chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee and Vice-Chair of the Senate Finance Committee. Before entering elected office, she spent eleven years as a prosecutor with the Clark County District Attorney's Office, experience she has drawn on heavily in making the case for her candidacy.

Her campaign platform centers on public safety, protecting reproductive rights, countering federal overreach, holding large corporations accountable, and advancing clean energy and environmental priorities.

On public safety, she supports law enforcement efforts to address drug and human trafficking, prevent gun violence, protect children online, and crack down on fraud targeting Nevadans.

On consumer protection, she has vowed to uphold the right to organize and ensure enforcement of wage and benefits laws. She also points to her legislative record of passing measures to shield consumers from utility overcharges and voting to cap prescription drug prices.

Nevada has a long history of competitive statewide races, and this fall's attorney general contest is expected to be no exception. Cannizzaro will face Trump-endorsed Adriana Fralick in November.

Trivia: In her free time, Cannizzaro enjoys running, playing with her three sons and spending time with family
