

NEVADA

Nevada voters will select a new governor, Lt. governor, and attorney general this cycle in what are all considered to be competitive contests. All 42 house seats are on the ballot along with 11 of the 21 senate seats. Democrats are expected to maintain control of both chambers.

Tya Mathis-Coleman

Tya Mathis-Coleman has spent more than six years as Deputy Treasurer of College Savings, a division overseeing prepaid tuition, 529 plan, and student loan programs. She also serves as Executive Director of the Millennium Scholarship, a merit-based award that has supported more than 177,000 Nevada students since its establishment.

If elected Treasurer, Mathis-Coleman says she wants to raise awareness among Nevadans about available financial literacy opportunities.

She has also identified the long-term solvency of the Millennium Scholarship as a top priority. The program, which has relied on one-time legislative appropriations over the years, is no longer expected to cover all eligible students beginning next year. To address the shortfall, she proposes exploring new revenue streams, including partnerships and donations from Nevada's professional sports teams.

Transparency is another pillar of her campaign, with a focus on ensuring clear reporting and accessible financial data for all Nevadans.

The State Treasurer's office is open this cycle, as incumbent Zach Conine is term limited. Democrats have held the seat for the past two terms, though the office has historically been competitive, and the party will need to defend it this November.

Trivia: Mathis-Coleman is an adjunct professor at the UNLV Lee School of Business.
